"The Map" was developed in 1999 by Roslyn Snyder, published in Journey to the centre of your life – the map. While appearing simple and easy to understand, "the map" is a powerful tool, whether you use it for yourself or for others. The map shows the way to Self - Actualisation. Nine independent evaluations have shown 'the map' to be successful and meets best practice guidelines for Aboriginal and Youth Mental Health.

About "the map" workshop

The only way to understand "the map" is to experience it. The first two days Roslyn takes you through the emotional landscape, exploring what it is like in each place. You slowly absorb "the map" which allows you understand what happens to you each day, to predict treatment options, empower individuals or community members. Each part of "the map" has an activity to ensure you retain what you learn. Activities are based around Aboriginal ways of language, art, music, story and movement.

Learning Objectives:

To give you:

1. A comprehensive non-threatening framework
2. A common language
3. Experience of how simple practical activities can connect, integrate and expand the mind
4. Simple processes for self care.

Enrolment for Thursday 30 April and Friday 1 May 2015.
